DESCRIPTION/STRUCTURE OF INFORMATION ON THE AUTHORISATION TO CONDUCT HABILITATION AND INAUGURATION PROCEEDINGS

Faculty Name: Faculty of Law

Name of the HK Department: Criminal Law

1. Definition of the field of habilitation and inauguration	The field of habilitation and inauguration proceedings Criminal Law corresponds in content to the subject of study of the discipline of Criminal Law. Criminal law in the narrower sense of the word is traditionally divided into: - substantive criminal law, which primarily defines criminal offences, conditions of criminal liability and impunity, types of sanctions, the manner of their imposition, and - procedural criminal law, which regulates the procedure of law enforcement authorities and courts in detecting, investigating and adjudicating criminal offences, the rights and obligations of the accused and other persons involved in the proceedings, and the enforcement of criminal penalties. In view of the Slovak Republic's membership of the Council of Europe and the European Union, the legal acts of the above-mentioned institutions have a fundamental impact on the entire European development in the criminal field and thus also on national criminal law. Criminal law also includes international criminal law, regulating in particular the liability of natural persons for crimes under international law, which also includes crimes against peace, crimes against humanity, war crimes, the crime of genocide and inhumane acts against the civilian population. In a broader sense, criminal law can also include criminology (the science of the causes and conditions of crime, its perpetrators and its prevention), victimology (the science of the victims of crime) and penology (the science of punishment, its enforcement and its effects). Criminal law also makes use of the knowledge of criminology (the science of the study of the patterns of the generation, search, detection and examination of traces and other criminally relevant information about crimes committed, as well as the methods and means of detecting and investigating crimes). The knowledge of the so-called forensic disciplines, which include in particular forensic medicine, forensic psychiatry, forensic psychology and forensic engineering, is also relevant to criminal law.	Awarded title: associate professor / professor

	A related discipline is Administrative Law, because, like criminal law, administrative law is an important means of protecting social relations. While criminal law punishes the most socially serious offences - criminal offences, administrative law is oriented towards the punishment of socially less serious acts, i.e. misdemeanours and other administrative offences. There are a number of offences which are subsidiary to the criminal law regulation of criminal offences.
